

First Photos of Halifax Horror to Reach Here

Looking Across Halifax Harbor Toward North Dartmouth, Also Devastated by the Explosion. Near the Far Shore, Lies the Belgian Relief Ship Imo, Which Caused the Disaster When It Rammed the French Munition Vessel Mont Blanc.

International Film Service.

Relief Workers Digging for Bodies of Victims on Barrington Street, Which Was Shattered by the Explosion and Then Swept by Fire Which Resulted When Stoves and Boilers Were Torn Asunder.

International Film Service.

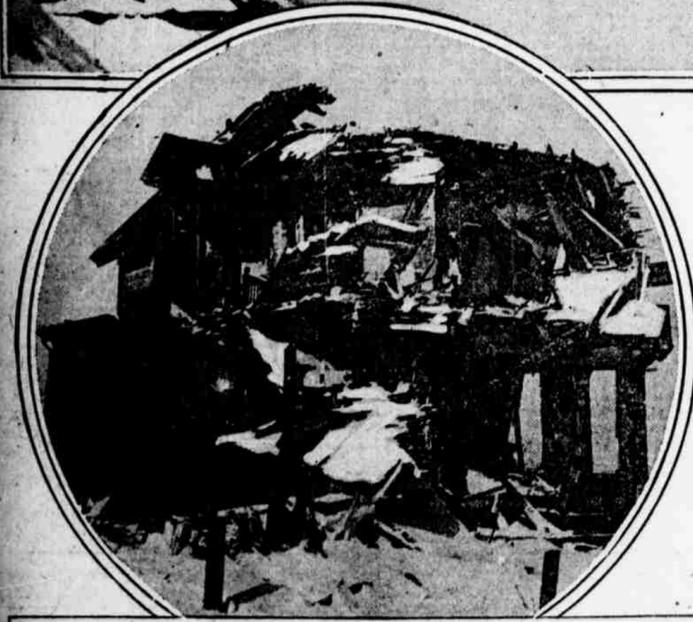

Thousands of Injured Swathed in Bandages Are a Familiar Sight in Halifax Since the Explosion. The Man on the Left Was Struck by a Falling Window. The Boy, Who Was Working in a Bakery, Was Laid Out by Flying Pots and Pans.

International Film Service.

The Great Tent City on North Common, in Halifax, Where Thousands of Homeless Were Promptly Given Shelter by the Military.

International Film Service.

The Thayer Home in Duffas Street, Halifax, Where a Group of Women Were Watching the Burning Munition Ship in the Harbor When the Explosion Occurred. The House Caved in, but the Women in Some Miraculous Manner Escaped Serious Injury.

International Film Service.

Grove Street Church in Halifax, Which Was Brought to Earth by the Terrific Concussion. By Some Freak the Steeple, Which Would Be Expected to Fall First, Remains Standing Intact.

International Film Service.

Thousands of Refugees, Their Shelters Destroyed by the Explosion, Flock to the Halifax Armory, Where Food Supplies Are Issued by the Military Authorities.

International Film Service.

Three Halifax Families Resting on the Heap of Furniture, Representing All They Could Save From the Fire.

International Film Service.